In the tracks of your own trailer

At some point, this City Liner Dry will be in service with a hire customer. Perhaps on a narrow street where there is little room to manoeuvre. Perhaps at a delivery address without a ramp, where the goods are unloaded via the tail lift.

On 18 November 2026, however, the trailer was still in production at KRONE in Herzlake. And two people who would later rent it out were already there that day: Philip Kriener and Vincent Koel from NTM in Münster accompanied one of their newly ordered KRONE City Liner Dry units through the production line.

“When placing an order, you go through the specifications point by point. But then standing right in front of your own trailer and seeing how the finished vehicle is assembled from the individual components is something quite special. Experiencing the production of our own vehicle up close like that was definitely a highlight of the tour for us,” reports Philip Kriener.

What makes the equipment stand out in everyday use

NTM’s City Liner Dry has a load compartment length of 11,170 millimetres. If space is tight during delivery, the TRIDEC forced steering system makes manoeuvring easier. If there’s no ramp at the destination, goods can be loaded and unloaded via the drive-under tail lift with a load capacity of 2,000 kilograms. These are two features that will later help determine which routes a hire customer schedules it for.

For NTM, the City Liner Dry forms part of a larger order. The Münster-based rental company has once again purchased a vehicle package from KRONE, which also includes the Cool Liner, Profi Liner and other box-body vehicles. Depending on the job, rental customers can use them to transport temperature-controlled goods, load from the side or access delivery points with limited space.

Liner, for example, the key considerations are how much manoeuvring space is available and how the goods are unloaded from the vehicle at the recipient's premises," explains Vincent Koel.

The partnership began in the year the company was founded

NTM was founded in 2023 and has been a KRONE Trailer customer ever since. With this new fleet of vehicles, the rental company is continuing the partnership. The visit to Herzlake is a story in itself. When the City Liner Dry is on the road with a rental customer in future, Philip Kriener and Vincent Koel will already be familiar with the first part of its journey. They were there when it was built in Herzlake.

About NTM

With the latest vehicle package from KRONE, NTM is further expanding its rental fleet.
